REPELLENT [Scenario]

A scenario seed for the HOSTILE sci-fi setting: www.paulelliottbooks.com/hostile.html

ASSUMPTIONS

The PCs are the crew of a hyperspace-capable starship and the ship's computer wakes the crew up prematurely while they are still in hyperspace. Hyperspace creatures have damaged critical drive components on the hull, trapping the ship in hyperspace.

PLAYER'S BRIEFING

The hyperspace capsules pop open and everyone gets dressed. Its only when they reach the bridge that they realise to their horror they are still in hyperspace. This is dangerous to their sanity! The android/computer informs them that hull components are damaged: eight metre-wide, circular drive plates spaced along the hull surrounding the hyperdrive compartment. These emitters channel the hyperwave out to surround the ship. Now damaged, the drive is trapped in hyperspace. Turning off the drive will destroy the ship.

SUIT-UP AND START REPAIRING

This scenario involves dangerous EVAs whilst in hyperspace. The PCs must exit the ship via an airlock and make their way to the nearest emitter. Gravity waves roll across the hull randomly, making this zero-G manoeuvre a dangerous task, and if the PC is knocked from the hull without a tether, or the tether breaks, they are lost in hyperspace. Having NPCs involved means you can showcase the dangers to the players. Use a combination of Average Vacc Suit rolls and Routine Strength rolls to negotiate the hull. Use tethering gear from the free HOSTILE Toolkits supplement. At the emitter, the PCs find the plate is buckled and torn, a number of protruding filaments ripped out. Repairing takes 10 minutes and is a Difficult Mechanical or Engineering task. Failures can be retried. The first, second and third plates can be fixed. Perhaps play with the PCs' minds. They see something flash by, or something slams into them and forces a Str roll, but then disappears. What's going on? Maybe an NPC might just disappear...

Effects of Hyperspace:

After 30 mins exposure, ask a player to make a Difficult Int roll, if failed the character becomes stupefied until jarred back to reality by a comrade. Being stupefied three times means the fourth roll is replaced by automatic catatonia for 4D6 hours.

THE ENTITIES

At the fourth emitter, the crew find a large, pale, ten-legged spider-thing tearing up the plate. It ignores them unless they touch it or interfere with it, then it will attack. If injured it jumps up and vanishes into hyperspace. The four remaining emitters have multiple entities at them. These will attack if disturbed, returning to feast on the drive energies if the PCs retreat. Do firearms work in hyperspace? What weapons can they improvise to drive these creatures away? Watch out for suit breaches! The entities are physical, but can 'phase shift' in the next round if needed, to move through physical objects. When phase shifted they cannot attack, feed or touch. As they drive off the last creature, they might find later on that one has entered the drive room this way for a big final showdown.
